CREATING OPPORTUNITIES FOR PLAY IN ROCHESTER

Natural play elements and adventure playgrounds have been around in Europe since the 1950s. This type of play infrastructure promotes unstructured, experimental and imaginative play. A hill to climb or cycle around, boulders or trees to climb, or interesting parks like those in Wilmington, Manhattan or Jamaica Plain all promote active play. According to the Urban Land Institute natural play elements support recreation, increase access to nature in urban spaces and boost the value of surrounding properties.
